

Dr. Jackie Booth holds a PhD in Curriculum and Instruction from the University of South Florida, a master's in Secondary Education from Southern Illinois University, and a bachelor's in journalism and English from Brigham Young University. She has taught K-12 in public and private schools, including four years with the Department of Defense schools in Germany, and graduate courses in education. Her programs in prevention education, teacher development, and economic education are used in schools and educational institutions throughout the US. Research interests include decision-making strategies, teacher leadership, and effective online teaching.