To Whom It May Concern,

Keiser University is important to our community for many reasons. As an alumni and small business owner, I have returned to campus to speak to students about real world experiences and to recruit new talent. I have also sat on the Advisory Board for several years to help ensure that the training that the students are receiving is relevant to the current market.

Keiser University has a reputation for supplying qualified and eager culinarians to the hospitality industry. As a community and state that thrives on tourism, having the resource of skilled culinarians to hire is key. The education that Keiser provides not only helps these graduates compete in the workforce, but it provides them with a competitive edge to succeed.

Sincerely,

Rebecca Kelly-Manders, CFPM
